On 14 November, 2014, Mr. Sabay Kieng (aka Kieng Sabay in Khmer), his wife and 3 children came to Canada among the first group of former boat people resettled under Canada's Temporary Public Policy Concerning Certain Vietnamese Persons Residing in Thailand without Status.

In an interview with CBC television, Mr. Kieng Sabay said that he had been stuck in the limbo of statelessness in Thailand for 25 years after fleeing Vietnam. See: https://www.cbc.ca/news/canada/toronto/vietnamese-immigrants-arrive-after-years-of-legal-limbo-1.2836661

Fourteen Vietnamese immigrants arrive in Canada after spending years in legal limbo.

After spending decades in stateless, legal limbo, 14 Vietnamese refugees arrived in Toronto on Saturday — brought to Canada by fellow "boat people" who immigrated years ago.

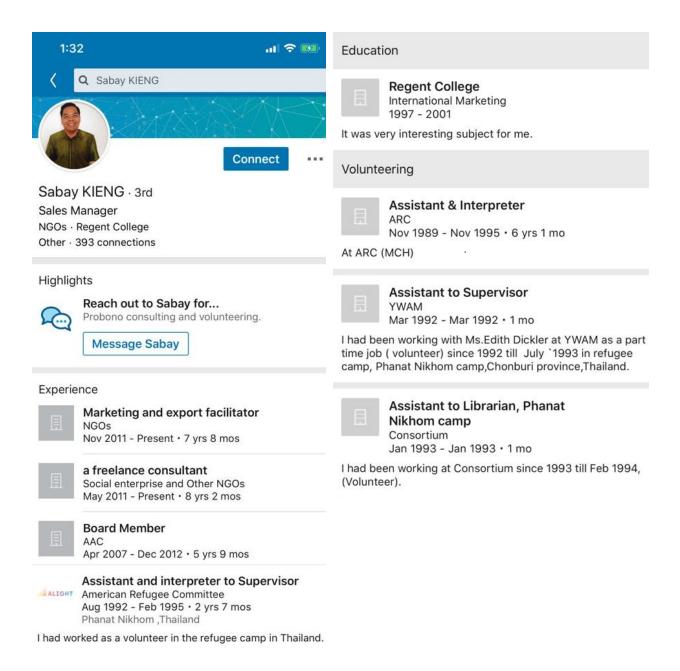

Sabay Kieng and dozens of others have been stuck in Thailand — stateless — for 25 years after fleeing Vietnam.

Kieng's refugee claims were repeatedly denied, but he and his family were finally able to move to Canada because of a special arrangement between the federal government and Thailand.

The refugees arrived thanks in part to sponsors David Huynh and his wife, who made their own journey from Vietnam to Canada years ago.

It took five years for CBC to realize it was deceived. Mr. Kieng Sabay was in Site II Camp for Cambodians and returned to Cambodia in 1997. According to his own biography, discovered by CBC, Kieng Sabay studied at Regent College, located in Phnom Penh, from 1997 to 2001. He was Board member of Artisans Association of Cambodia from 2007 to 2012 and has conducted business activities and was involved in social enterprise in Cambodia since 2011.

According to CBC's investigation, before coming to Canada he owned a jewelry and handicraft shop named Craftworks Cambodia in the nation's capital Phnom Penh since at least 2008. A business partner of Mr. Kieng Sabay told CBC that Mr. Kieng Sabay and his family had hurriedly left Phnom Penh to go to Bangkok and then to Canada. According to this person, Mr. Sabay's family belongs to the upper class in Cambodia. He was not drifting in Thailand as a stateless.

According to the CBC staff conducting the investigation, "CBC tried reaching Kieng on the phone again, but he said he was 'busy' before hanging up. CBC made further attempts to get a comment about these inconsistencies but did not get a response." https://www.cbc.ca/news/canada/vietnamese-boat-people-resettlement-program-1.5278953

A business record identifies Sabay Kieng, who also went by the name Keang Sapbay in Cambodia, as the owner of the Craftworks Cambodia website years before he came to Canada. (CBC)

Also, according to CBC's investigation, Mr. Kieng Sabay once attended a business conference in Manila, Philippines, which means he must have had valid documents to travel and was not stateless as he claimed to justify resettlement to Canada. Just ten months after resettlement to Canada, Mr. Kieng Sabay was already back in Phnom Penh, Cambodia on 24 July, 2015 to take care of his business. Most likely, he traveled back to Cambodia using his Cambodian passport.
